Parole Suitability During the Pandemic

By G. Bruce Smith
Editor-in-Chief

BY THE END OF JULY, the Board of Parole Hearings (BPH) began holding its hearings. The BPH is a board of seven members, including a judge, a prosecutor, a defense attorney, and three lay members. The BPH is responsible for making decisions on parole suitability for inmates.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the BPH has had to make adjustments to its procedures. The BPH has been able to continue to hold hearings, but with some limitations.
